25 Things About The Titanic We Thought Were True (But Are Actually False)

Erickson, Enos said, even learned one of the reasons why no Titanic researcher in the past 70 years had heard from the Samson's captain: Carl Johann Ring died June 22, 1918, after his ship, the Eglantine, was torpedoed by a German U-boat in the North Sea. The light on the other ship, however, was still the same, so I looked at her through the binoculars and found it was her masthead light flickering. This was before Groves also noticed the approaching ship.

The Californian Incident A Reality Check

. In 1958, Lord contacted the Mercantile Marine Service Association in an effort to clear his name.

20 Surprising Facts About the Titanic

It did not matter when he arrived before or directly after the sinking. Titanic and the Mystery Ship. Everyone agreed there should have been more lifeboats on Titanic, and the U.

Mystery Ship

Californian simply did not have enough crew aboard to provide that many trained seamen without compromising the equally necessary proper watch in the propulsion plant and on deck. The image shows the smoke from Titanic rising through the cold air, and then reaching a layer of warmer air, where it seems to be trapped by a glass ceiling. In many ways the Titanic disaster forebodes the history of the 20th century that is to follow: a study in the precautionary principle.
