The war we are in; the last decade and the next : Burnham, James, 1905

The line shows a fifty year moving average of combat death rates in England. The approach outlined here is designed to address this gap. Once-remote battles and war crimes now regularly make it onto our TV and computer screens, and in more or less real time.

10 Challenges Facing the U.S. Over the Next Two Decades

Our analysis here does not incorporate such geopolitical, political, and cultural elements.

Strategy, scenarios, and the global shift in defense power

It strengthened planning and logistics capabilities and began deploying more heavily armed forces able to wade into battle if necessary. If only 15 years remain, the odds of frittering them all away still remain high. This follows from the previously shown facts that the number of war victims declined while the number of conflicts increased.

10 Challenges Facing the U.S. Over the Next Two Decades

During World War II, Allied bombers killed hundreds of thousands of civilians in Dresden and Tokyo not by accident, but as a matter of tactics; Germany, of course, murdered civilians by the millions. Other Western militaries are undergoing similar retrenchments. This boom will begin in the 2050s after the war and last throughout the 2060s.

How America will collapse (by 2025)

In this photo provided by NATO Training Mission - Afghanistan, an Afghan National Army soldier takes a break during training at the Kabul Military Training Center, Jan. The world pays next to no attention as the American Century ends in silence. In fact, both World War I and World War II occurred within just a thirty-year period.

The war we are in; the last decade and the next : Burnham, James, 1905

Now we have to see if it works in theory! Armed drones now attack targets that in the past would have required an invasion with thousands of heavily armed troops, displacing huge numbers of civilians and destroying valuable property along the way. Even if future events prove duller than these four scenarios suggest, every significant trend points toward a far more striking decline in American global power by 2025 than anything Washington now seems to be envisioning.
