The 1890 Census Fires and Other Burned Genealogy Records

In contrast to the Nihon Shoki compiled 720 , the first of commissioned by the imperial court, which was modeled on and was intended to be a national chronicle that could be shown with pride to foreign envoys, the Kojiki is inward looking, concerned mainly with the ruling family and prominent clans, and is apparently intended for internal consumption. These are records written in the reverse side of the sutra or in the wrapping of imported items that survived as a result of reusing wasted official documents.
