Hannah Arendt on the conquest of space

This is true both for wall paintings and furnishings: no system is, and will ever be, able to account for all the aspects of prehistoric art at a time. However, I find this empowering as well, because we've repeatedly underestimated not only the size of our cosmos, but also the power of our human mind to understand it.

Having listed the above elements of the hierarchy, we must immediately add that these realities are not strictly compartmentalized as in the Western mind. At the same time, we must remember that, from a scientific point of view, the assumption of monogenism should not be definitely excluded and that several researchers accept the possibility of a monogenetic origin of the human body.

Is the Universe Made of Math? [Excerpt]

Anyway, this really wasn't dumbed down science.

African Worldview

It is as though the sciences had done what the humanities never could have achieved, namely, to prove demonstrably the validity of this concern. The earliest forms of fish developed 450 million years ago, while the earliest Amphibians and Reptiles appeared 350 million years ago.

Human Universe by Brian Cox

On the other hand, paleontological research on the oldest human fossils ever recorded attests to several physical and biological discontinuities between Homo habilis and their ancestors, such as the improvement of their cranial capacity by 40% compared to Australopithecines. .
