Putting health first

The NES comprises three initiatives evaluation questions, indicator development and a toolkit of evaluation instruments , of which Evaluating Primary Health Care in Canada: The Right Questions to Ask is the first. NB's vision for a healthy future shifts the focus from acute care to community-based services. In terms of sustainability, all the Atlantic provinces have incorporated the core BBT modules and programs within ongoing training programs in their respective jurisdictions and regions.

Putting Health First

This AOHC project produced a resource kit that summarizes relevant research on interdisciplinary work and contains a self-assessment tool, case studies, and an intervention guide with information on how to address barriers for interdisciplinary care. It is expected that the toolkit will increase the interest and involvement of FPs in family practice settings and thereby contribute to the sustainability of primary health care renewal. The commitment and involvement of each jurisdiction in shaping the collaboration contributed to the initiative's overall success.

Putting Health First

The G7 explicitly cited SDG 3. First, it is of critical importance to have all the key stakeholders involved right from the beginning of the initiative. Manitoba Health held the initiative back until it had the right players from the communities, academia, professional associations and governments involved. Financing the Canadian health care system accordingly evolved incrementally within individual provinces, as they responded to market failure, with national government involvement through a series of programs to share costs with the provinces.

Why We Need Health Care Reform in the US

The EICP partner organizations successfully developed and ratified a set of guiding principles and a framework to enhance the prospects and options for more collaborative care.
