The Companion Guide to Wales (Companion Guides)

Gerald of Wales mentions a certain staff of St Curig that was kept in the church: it was covered in gold and silver and was sought after for the cure of glandular swellings. The village has one of the oldest vicarages in Wales near the river and an adjacent tithe barn. Her sculpture House 1993 was a concrete cast of the interior of a Victorian terraced house - the most characteristic type of British residential property, and a receptacle of memory for their millions of inhabitants - which were demolished in untold thousands during post-war urban renewal.

Assuming that the essential qualification for entry was met, how were those included in this book actually chosen? At the height of his powers in the mid-thirteenth century Llywelyn Fawr intended the abbey church to become a national cathedral and began to build a nave the length of which was only exceeded in the British Isles by Winchester and Durham. The main road returns past the reservoir to Defynnog.
