Zi Chen, who fled south to Kunming and Hong Kong after the outbreak of the war, decided to stay on the mainland after the takeover by the communists in 1949, but did not go to Peking as many urged him to do, accepting instead a post as professor of history at Lingnan University in Canton, where he stayed until his death in 1969. This case will not be discussed here, because I did not encounter such a conception in my research on the historiography of the Republican period.

Korea's connection to Shang

On his return to China in 1926 he became a professor at the Research Academy for National Studies Guoxue yanjiusuo of Qinghua University. He describes the mutual influence of Han-Chinese and foreign culture and repeatedly stresses the profound influence of foreign habits on the Han tradition. See Eminent Chinese of the Ch'ing Period 1644-1912 , ed.
