Heraldic Standards

In most heraldic traditions a woman does not display a crest, though this tradition is being relaxed in some heraldic jurisdictions.

Debrett's Guide to Heraldry and Regalia by David Williamson

Eagles are almost always shown with their wings spread, or displayed. More often than not, examples show a design based on the charges and colours that appear in the original design, which means, if you know what colours you are determined to have, and you have decided on your charges, you can design your standard - even if your device submission is bogged down in the quagmire that is the College of Heralds. The sub-ordinaries include the inescutcheon, the orle, the tressure, the double tressure, the bordure, the chief, the canton, the label, and flaunches.
