The great agnostic : Robert Ingersoll and American freethought

There was, there is, no creator. The hatreds engendered by war are dying out of the hearts of men, and over the broken cannon clamber the roses of joy.

Robert G. Ingersoll

I have read Milton once. I gave up the New because it vouched for the truth of the Old.

The Civil War of the United States: Robert Ingersoll, born August 11, 1833

As a counselor and advocate, Ingersoll was among the very first of his time, the equal of the very first of any other time — as great and formidable a warrior as ever fought for justice beneath the aegis of the law. And yet this man, so natural, keeping his cheek so close to the breast of nature, strangely enough thought that Pope and Churchill and Shensstone and Thomson and Lyttelton and Beattie were great poets. Burr must be a perfect puppy to assail Oglesby in such a beastly manner.

Robert G. Ingersoll

. Ingersoll himself was wont to say, in after-years, that he never knew of another local legal aggregation of such ability. Very often we struck our feet against the dead; more frequently against those who still had spirit enough to resent it with a moan.

Robert Ingersoll

His developing views were largely expressed to his close friends with only an occasional public outburst. They will have to get over the prejudices born of isolation. I love the old Republic, bounded by the seas, walled by the wide arc, domed by heavens blue, and lit with the eternal stars.

Happy Birthday, Robert Ingersoll!

In the undiscovered vaults of being, nature has locked the secret of genius, and into the Styx of human ignorance has she cast the key.
