Zukai yoku waku Kojin jōhō hogohō to puraibashī māku (2005 edition)

At the end of the book, the texts of seventeen relevant laws and ordinances are given, along with precedents and reports by the Review Board, and the reader is encouraged to make the best use of these reference materials. The general regulations covering protection of the personal information held by local public bodies include provisions formulated by these bodies themselves, and local personal-information protection laws have by now been passed by all local governments at both the prefectural and municipal levels. Bearing this in mind, this publication includes a comprehensive survey of local personal-information protection laws from the prefectural level down, with more detailed coverage of noteworthy provisions adopted at both the prefectural and municipal levels.

Furthermore, the preface explains the circumstances whereby these pieces of legislation came to be established, along with the legal system covering the protection of personal information.

UTokyo BiblioPlaza

A salient feature of this publication is the way in which it does not limit its discussion to simply explaining the relevant legal texts but rather expands its coverage to include international trends in personal information protection law, the history of how a legal framework for the protection of personal information was put in place in Japan, the major judicial precedents, reports of the Information Disclosure and Personal Information

Protection Review Board, and particular local ordinances on the protection of personal information. Tōkyō : Kabushiki Kaisha Yūhikaku MLA Citation Uga, Katsuya. The discussion of judicial precedents also includes examples involving local ordinances on the protection of personal information.
