Morrison, Adrian Memorial University The Search for Robinson's Room: Archaeological Excavations at an Early Eighteenth - Century Fishing Station in Canso, Nova Scotia. Inuit men were victors in many of their fights; but ultimately they changed strategies in the 1760's and entered into a Peace and Friendship Treaty relationship with the British in their un-surrendered land. Subarctic anthropological and archaeological projects are often pursued in isolation, and historically assumed great uniformity in northern environment and culture when in fact there exists considerable regional diversity.

It was intended to defend the Company's interests in the region, but was used as a fur trade post dealing directly with the Inuit, Dene and Cree and as a launching point for whaling expeditions and northern exploration. For example, a dramatic increase in the use of abundant riverine aquatic species such as shoal-adapted mollusks and shallow-water fish may have brought about the gradual adoption of sedentary lifeways in many parts of eastern North America after 7000 BC. On Left Fork of Little Blaine Creek this coal appears to have a section similar to that in the region about Torchlight.
