The Comedies of Terence, in the Callipian recension, and chiefly written as prose, with arguments and some notes, written in A.D. 1454 by Joh. Pirkheimer

L'originalité de ce poète ne consiste donc pas, comme celle de son devancier, à rendre, sous des noms et sous des costumes grecs, la vie et le caractère de la Rome contemporaine; il ne sympathise pas avec le peuple, ne descend jamais à ces bouffonneries que Plaute a si largement prodiguées, à ces peintures prises au sein de la foule qu'il dédaigne. This volume brings together Plautus' The Haunted House Mostellaria in which the intrigues of a clever slave provide a virtuoso comic role; his Casina, or A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Wedding, a fast moving romp, full of joie de vivre, Terence's The Eunuch, his greatest success and closest in style to the plays of Plautus; and his Brothers, a very modern comedy about how to bring up children.

Reste le portrait toujours saisissant d'une époque disparue mais étrangement proche.

The Comedies of Terence

It was Terence who gave to Latin a human face, the voice of the slave, the voice of the woman, Christ preaching to publicans and prostitutes, Christianity being the 'religion of women and slaves', and it was Terence's Comedies which were used in medieval monasteries and in Renaissance grammar schools for teaching Latin to men and women both.
