Portrait Lighting Essentials

Although continuous light can be used, I would thoroughly recommend that, if you want to get serious about studio photography, you invest in a couple of studio flash heads. This creates an edge of light around your subject, giving them definition and separation from the background.

Photography, Studio and Camera Lighting

Place your light directly in front of them, higher than their head and angled down. I recommend using a large light source so that you can light both your subject and your background at the same time. Split lighting is the quintessential example of side lighting.

The last thing to know about light is that its intensity decays following the inverse square law. For example, if the key lights are set to f8, the fill light would be set to f4 for two stops under the key. Harsh, contrast-heavy shadows are what you get when you shoot outdoors on bright, sunny days, by the way.
