The Most Famous Poems by Pablo Neruda

Night of the seas, tell me whether your heights of hair cover all solitude, whether it is infinite this space of blood and prairies. These notes were contributed by members of the GradeSaver community.

10 Best Pablo Neruda Love Poems

Not only the poisonous skin of copper, or the nitrate spread like a frieze, a snowy deposit, but the vine, the cherry prized by the spring are mine, and I belong like a dark atom to the arid lands and the autumn light of the grape, to this country of metal lifted in towers of snow.

Poet, hero, rapist

Light's shape is round as a ring and we move ourselves by its movements. I believe that this man must be enthroned, rightly shod and crowned. He chose his pen name after Czech poet Jan Neruda.

Late and Posthumous Poems, 1968

Your Laughter is seen as poem regarding an adverse situation and about the one thing which helps one endure it. I never tire of going and returning, death does not stop me with its stone, I never tire of presence and absence.

Late and Posthumous Poems, 1968

Anger of ocean, blows of the heavens have circled your proud head with cracks and fissures, and your face rests like a conch, with wounds that mark your swaying brow. © Jan Baeke Translated by Megen Molé Selected Bibliography Crepusculario, Claridad, Santiago, 1923 Veinte poemas de amor y una canción desesperada, Nascimento, Santiago, 1924 El habitante y su esperanza, Nascimento, Santiago, 1926 Residencia en la tierra: 1925-1931, Nascimento, Santiago, 1933 España en el corazón, Ercilla, Santiago, 1937 Alturas de Macchu Picchu, Librería Neira, Santiago, 1947 Canto general, Talleres Gráficos de la Nación, Mexico City, 1950 Los versos del capitán, L'Arte Tipografica, Naples, 1952 Odas elementales, Losada, Buenos Aires, 1954 Cien sonetos de amor, Editorial Universitaria, Santiago, 1959 Las piedras de Chile, Losada, Buenos Aires, 1961 Memorial de Isla Negra 5 vol.

Late and Posthumous Poems, 1968

Rafael is the poet Rafael Alberti. Unloose it, unloose it, in a certain ocean, and a certain time, that I know. And even though my sombre love silences it much later the spring will speak it.

Pablo Neruda: a Life Consumed by Poetry and Politics

And between death and rebirth the space is less grand than we thought, the frontier less implacable.

If You Forget Me By Pablo Neruda, Famous Love Poem

A poet closer to death than to philosophy, closer to pain than to intelligence, closer to blood than ink. Trains hurled me onwards waters recalled me, on the surface of grapes it seemed that I touched you. .
