Ruskin and conservation: St Petrock's church, Parracombe

What a great opportunity to assist local community members when they put out a call to assist identifying and recording the details of the St Petrocks Church grave site markers tombstones.

St Petrock's Church, Parracombe

Nothing spectacular but a small village which lost 3 villagers to the 1952 floods which swept on to Lynton and on down to Lynmouth causing terrible loss of life and devastation.

Explored the village in the rain but it didn't take away any of the beauty. In 1854 Ruskin published his response to the reopening of Crystal Palace at its new site in Sydenham. Legendary hilltop church with a perfect interior Set in glorious countryside on the edge of Exmoor this hilltop church seems to be a modest medieval building, but it is the lovely light Georgian interior with painted texts and wonderful furnishings that have hardly changed for 200 years that make it very special.

The best churches in North Devon and Exmoor

The inherent character of Parracombe is that of an upland community, historically with a compact pattern of settlement of plain vernacular buildings, including some good farm groups.
