Militjuro en Pollando

Each day delivers new blows to the waning economy. In December 1970, 27,000 soldiers as well as 1,300 tanks and armed vehicles were used to suppress the protests, over twice as many secured strategically important facilities all over the country. Thousands of others were repressed by the developing communist structures.

A number of international flights were hijacked in attempts to flee the country and its economic problems. State structures are ceasing to function.

The Polish Constitutional Court and Political after 1989: Between the Continuity and Discontinuity of the Constitutional Narrative

The insight is valuable to the extent that it reflects the probability that Gorbachev bungled very badly his belated attempts to replace the neo-Stalinists Honecker, Jakes and Zhivkov in 1989. In March 1968, officers in plain clothes helped disperse the rally in Warsaw that sparked mass student protests.
