Yoshida Shoin

His imprisonment in Hagi was transmuted to a kind of house arrest and in 1856 he started giving lessons at a school an uncle of his had founded, the Shōka Sonjuku. You will be willing to do it if you have a comrade, and things will move in the direction in which the comrade will come true.

Yoshida Shōin : Tokutomi, Ichirō, 1863

In the fire, I carried out my luggage more than I did.

As a Calligrapher, he holds a 10th-dan in Shodo from the Nihon Kyoiku Shodo Renmei, and is also a Certified Graphology Adviser from the Japan Graphologist Association.

[Yoshida Shoin]: I'm worried about Japan, I study the spirit of great love and solemnity.

His historical importance became apparent after he died, when his students played a pivotal role in the Meiji Restoration. The later world has had a strong impact on the strength of its spirituality.

However, in this case the horizontal stroke in his signature has an added nuance, because it slopes sharply up to the right, as do most of his horizontal strokes.

Yoshida Shōin : Tokutomi, Ichirō, 1863

At the age of eleven he began to instruct Mori Takachikain, and seven years later, in 1847, he was formally designated a full master of the military arts. These alone count in life. The strokes are thin and tight, like a well-tuned stringed instrument, ready to perform and unafraid of action.
