Mound Builders of Mississippi

Boyd Mound — Most known burial mounds in Mississippi date to the Middle Woodland times circa 100 B. Some tools and recovered pottery remnants suggest they had developed some farming skills to supplement hunting skills.

People of Detroit

It is one of 11 mound complexes from this period found in the Lower Mississippi Valley. The materials used in many of these artifacts were not locally obtained. Mississippian period mounds can be seen at the , , , , and sites.

Thankfully, the Ohio Historical Society made great efforts to preserve and restore the site for future generations. Following excavation in 1965, the mound was restored to its estimated original dimensions of about eight feet high by 85 feet across the base. These bore inscriptions that later were determined to be fake.

What region did the Mound Builders lived in?

If we could go back in time to when the first settlers began taking up residence here, you would be impressed with the sheer number of these sites.

Mound Builders

The Book of Mormon depicts these settlers building magnificent cities, which were destroyed by warfare about CE 385.

Mound Builders

The Mississippian period 1000 to 1700 A. A small mound commemorating the site has been reconstructed near an overlook to the lake.
