By all accounts, Neil Armstrong was perhaps the most enigmatic of the 12. He was also the lead flight director for Apollo 13, guiding the crippled spacecraft back to Earth safely after an oxygen tank exploded during the flight to the moon, forcing the crew to swing around the moon and return to Earth without a lunar landing. He has since retired from the astronaut corps and now he dedicates his time to helping young women and minorities get involved in STEAM science, technology, engineering, art and math so they can realize and live up to their full potential.
