Social Communication Disorder

This can help reduce stress.

Interventions for Learning Disorders

Behavioral interventions for the home are generally simple, easy things any parent can learn to do without even seeing a therapist. Behavior problems, emotional difficulties, low self-esteem, and family stresses can also occur.

Movement Disorders

This medication should be part of a therapeutic package that might include educational and behavioral intervention and psychotherapy. Therefore, if families need help finding a speech pathologist, the school counselor can help them find a professional in the community who will benefit the student. Social language is learned, self-esteem is built, and friendships are formed during recreational activities with peers.

Helping Children with Communication Disorders in the Schools

The symptoms of ADHD, such as inability to pay attention, difficulty sitting still, and difficulty controlling impulses, can make it hard for children with this diagnosis to do well in school.

Incorporating Typical Peers Into the Social Learning of Children with Autism Spectrum Disorders: Articles: Indiana Resource Center for Autism: Indiana University Bloomington

Post the model and refer to it often. Emphasize that these problems are not the fault of the child, parent, or teacher.

Interventions for Learning Disorders

For example, one-on-one treatment sessions are often used to teach specific social communication skills. Minor problems need to be overlooked and positive behavior needs to be properly recognized and praised. More so, it is important to realize the ramifications that a slow response to diagnoses, or a misdiagnoses can have.
