Papers of Rt. Hon. William Ewart Gladstone (1809)

At her own desk not far from his in the Shakespearean library, going through commentaries and noting references, Kate kept pace with her husband as he charted the wilderness of Hamlet criticism. Each month Furness reported to the Trustees the number of books received and catalogued, and by January 1888 Barnwell and Keen had catalogued some 20,000 books, represented by over 71,000 handwritten cards housed in cabinets donated by Furness.
