The term was used with increasing frequency as generals sought to reunify Japan, and came to be equivalent with the land of Japan itself. The results of a 1911 census on education in German colonies were published in 1914 Schlunk 1914a, 1914b.

School Politics in the Borderlands and Colonies of Imperial Germany: A Japanese Colonial Perspective, ca. 1900

All of this is thanks to the highest considerations of his Majesty the Emperor. The Ministry of Educational and Cultural Affairs suggested allowing Sakaguchi to visit schools only if accompanied by school inspectors. By 1945, Hoshina had tirelessly repeated his opinion in his various writings, in which he continued to refer to Prussian Poland, together with the multiethnic Hapsburg Empire, as historical examples of political failures.

Reports to the Colonial Government of Korea Although the school doors in both border regions remained closed to the two Japanese scholars, Sakaguchi and Hoshina were able to gather some information based on print material, partially supported by their private networks. At the end of the 19th century, Chinese Ambassador to Great Britain took the traditional in the tianxia world view and replaced it with a Chinese-foreigner distinction. For example, in 1905, Gotō wrote that during the previous twenty years the German colonial administration had made rapid development based on the analysis of other colonial powers by German authorities, and the colonial government of Taiwan found this approach so inspiring that it had also published some books on the German colonial system Gotō 1905, 1—2.
