I think that's the beauty of it. I started this short novel with some despair as the first few pages seemed like Psychobabble philosophies. And which begs the question, how can someone without a fully developed prefrontal cortex truly appreciate or fully comprehend something as complex and nuanced as Dostoevsky's writing? ABOUT THE SERIES: For over 100 years Oxford World's Classics has made available the widest range of literature from around the globe.

Notes from Underground

From the best-selling author who completed Robert Jordan's epic Wheel of Time series comes a new, original creation that matches anything else in modern fantasy for epic scope, thrilling imagination, superb characters, and sheer addictiveness. In fact, to me they are very similar in content and in feel --- psychologically tormented, self-righteous, megalomaniac protagonists disillusioned by societal norms fall in love with young ladies of ill repute and take it upon themselves to attempt to reform the young ladies but in the end it's the young ladies who reform the psychologically tormented, self-righteous, megalomaniac protagonists.

Notes from the Underground & The Gambler by Fyodor Dostoevsky

As I've come to find out, even with a fully developed prefrontal cortex Dostoevsky is still rather overwhelming and abstruse.

Notes from the Underground, and The Gambler

At the end, they go off without him to a secret brothel, and, in his rage, the underground man follows them there to confront Zverkov once and for all, regardless if he is beaten or not.

Crime And Punishment; The Gambler; Notes From The Underground by Fyodor Dostoevsky

I just think Dostoevsky has such a clear potent way of seeping into your consciousness that he's almost like water that finds a crack and just keeps dripping, and I guess that's his greatness as an artist, not his prose style, though I've only read him in translation.

Notes from the Underground, and The Gambler

His anti-socialness made me Read these two novellas back to back as part of my read everything by Dostoevsky quest. All three titles in a single volume: Crime and Punishment; The Gambler; and Notes from the Underground.

The Gambler by Fyodor Dostoevsky, First Edition

However, as the Underground Man points out in his rant, such dreams are based on a utopian trust of not only the societal systems in place but also humanity's ability to avoid corruption and irrationality in general. . But there still must be a way for me to pay off my debt to society, right? His good friend Demitri Razumikhin who helps him to become well when he is sick, and at the end marries his sister.
