They continued to care for and study the animals that had become their life's work, living in this harsh and isolated environment amidst wild and untamed predatory cats. After some time living together, the Adamsons decided to set Elsa free rather than send her to a zoo, and spent many months training her to hunt and survive on her own. On August 20, 1989 at Kampi Ya Simba camp of the lions in Kora, George Adamson and two of his assistants were killed by Somali poachers when they intervened on behalf of a group of German tourists.
