Global Terrorism: The Challenge of Global Terrorism

Is it just as worried about terrorism? As we will see in the following section, not only is there a strong regional focus but this is also heavily concentrated in only a few countries within these regions.

Terrorism

Across many countries in the Middle East, Southeast Asia, Africa and Latin America more than 8-in-10 said they were worried. Here we see that a large share was willing to change their behaviors: over 40% said they were less willing to travel abroad; around a third were less likely to fly and go to crowded events; and one-quarter to go into skyscrapers.

Background Information: Country Reports on Terrorism and Patterns of Global Terrorism

But, compared to other countries this was relatively low. But the data is complete enough to provide perspectives across the world regions. This is because media sources do not always report, or accurately report terrorist events; this can lead to absent or conflicting estimates.

Background Information: Country Reports on Terrorism and Patterns of Global Terrorism

Here we find more evidence that many people in the US are worried about terrorism. It appeared to play less of a role for local outlets.
