Ancient DNA shines light on Caribbean history, prehistory

Interceptor was a re-dressed , a full-scale replica sailing ship from , fully repainted before going on a 40-day voyage beginning December 2, 2002, arriving on location on January 12, 2003. Each scene featuring them was shot twice: a reference plate with the actors, and then without them to add in the skeletons, an aesthetic complicated by Verbinski's decision to shoot the battles with handheld cameras. Moreover, indigenous populations of islands like Puerto Rico and Hispaniola were likely far smaller at the time of the Spanish arrival than previously thought.
