Formation & Perception of the Modern Arab World

The third type of repression is the ongoing repression that is linked to the individual from birth to the present moment. The only way out of this is to dissolve language and turn it into a transparent crystal that moves in all directions: between the name, the subject, the thought, and their components; between the word and its components; and between the letter and its components. The final chapter includes a selection of 49 photographs from Buheiry's photograph collection.

Formation & Perception of the Modern Arab World

Collectively, these essays make three central arguments: that the category of ÖminorityÖ became meaningful only with the rise of the modern nation-state; that in this new political landscape, groups labeled minorities often sought simultaneously to project an essential cultural ÖauthenticityÖ and a nationalist commitment through specific and focused types of political engagement; and that Middle Eastern and North African minority identities owe much of their modern self-definition to developments within diaspora populations and other transnational frameworks.

In other words, space is direction. To be more precise, it moves in all directions, or in all of space; or, if you will, the Crystalist school is nothing other than a negation of the objectification of objects. This applies to subatomic particles, sub-subatomic particles, and to the limitless forms of existence of the entire cosmos.

Such an agenda is set forth in this position statement written by Chebaa on the occasion of the three-person Belkahia, Chebaa, and Melehi exhibition at the Mohammed V Theatre gallery in Rabat. This has led to the creation of a new man for this age, the indifferent man, the refusing man, the man who does not experience pleasure.
