Counseling for Peace in the Midst of War: Counselors from Northern Uganda Share Their Views

In the field of Christian ministry the statistics of burnout seem alarmingly high and the focus on building resilience is both urgent and important. Kirsten Birkett has provided a great service by sharing her research into these areas in her latest book Resilience: A Spiritual Project.

Mental Health and Psychosocial Support in Peacebuilding

This assesment reviews the current status of livestock marketing and trade in Karamoja, including cross-border trade with Kenya and South Sudan. Integrating a trauma perspective into community work after group violence. These restrictions were implemented in March 2020 and were still in place in August 2020.

If indeed a chain is as strong as its weakest link, then the individual—within relationships, families, and communities—must be regarded as the starting point for postconflict repair. People that live in areas of enduring conflict display various degrees of resilience: some do well out of conflict, some live in conditions of fear and extreme destitution and others simply get by.

And he always used to tell us stories of his prisoner of war days. TPO Uganda is presently providing integrated support to refugee communities in West Nile, Western and northern Uganda districts. Within the fields of research and practice of peacebuilding and mass violence prevention, societal and individual mental health is often overlooked, yet remains a critical area for further partnership, analysis, and evidence-based policy integration.
