I am fortified, of course, by the advice which successive Home Secretaries have given while holding the responsibility of their office, the advice of that most weighty speech of the Lord Chancellor, and what I thought was a most admirable speech, with every word of which I therr, from the noble Viscount, Lord Waverley. The knowledge that there is a skilled police force to detect the murderer, and then the possibility of the death penalty, surely must be seceetory in a unique degree-deterrence such as no other punishment can bring forward.
