Īmān and Islām

Alhamdulillah, we're at 900 supporters. وَأَدْخِلْهُمْ الْجَنَّةَ And enter them in paradise.

Beautiful Prayer (Dua) of the Prophet ﷺ for the Deceased

Faithfulness to Allāh consists in submitting to Divine commandments; faithfulness to His Messenger means following in his footsteps; faithfulness to Muslim leaders consists in obeying their orders so long as they do not go against Allāh and His Messenger; and faithfulness to Muslims in general consists in doing one's utmost for their good. Our intuition, intellect and innate nature might have given us a dim glimpse into them, but never the like of the certitude and solid knowledge only a faithful emissary can convey.

faith

All of this was done in a time period when Muslims had begun succumbing to doubts and moving towards materialism. Hailing from New York, Dr.

Iman

The basis of all higher religions is a faith in Divine revelation, because God is known to man, and personal contact with Him is established, only through revelation. For Ibn Taymīyah the Ashʿarī conclusion that islām is wider than īmān implies that while all those who submit are persons of faith, not all who profess faith are muslims, a conclusion with which he totally disagreed.

The Estranged Middle Way

What about us, later generations of Muslims.

The Dīwān

Use of Media The generation gap between al Qaeda and ISIS is reflected in disparate communications tactics and outreach. On the internet, al Qaeda has primarily relied on conventional media — including older mechanisms, such as jihadist and websites — to propagate its message.
