It is possible to argue, although it is impossible to prove, that the Japanese military would have still argued for the continuation of the war even after the dropping of a third bomb, and even after a fourth bomb. Japan had concentrated its strength for a decisive defense of the homeland. As for the first argument, the comparison between atomic bombings of the homeland and the Soviet invasion in Manchuria is irrelevant.

In addition to the excerpts from Togo and Sakomizu, Shusen shiroku also contains excerpts from Toyoda and Hoshina Zenshiro, who attended the imperial conference, and Kido and Shimomura, who did not. Army and Navy ministers were drawn from the ranks of serving officers. There is the breakout scenario that many people raise as their objection to the elimination of nuclear weapons, that someone would develop nuclear weapons and that the breakout state would rule the world.

On different occasions, both Kido and Sakomizu told a different story. Order Paper and Notice Paper of the Senate of Canada. If you found yourself in this position.

[Shigenori Togo, 1882-1950, head and shoulders, facing front]

Without the Soviet entry into the war between the two bombs, Japan would most likely have continued the war. On the other hand, it is only six hours after the Soviet declaration of war and invasion that the Supreme Council meets.

I am not interested in that discussion of whether it was right morally to drop the bomb.

The Great European War and the Rise of Radical Shintō Ultrationalism in Japan

There was no chance the soviet union would deter the u. Would it have hopelessly alienated the Japanese from the United States, to the point where it would have been difficult to impose the American occupation on Japan? Oya Soichi Tokyo: Bungei shunjusha, 1973 , 36. Togo, however, accepts Article 11 of the San Francisco Peace Treaty signed Sept.
