Herceptin: Uses, Dosage & Side Effects

Usually when a virus infects a cell, its genes take over the control of a cell's machinery and transform the cell into a virus-making factory that eventually explodes, spewing out thousands of new viruses. Viruses occasionally capture a gene from a cell of the organism they invade and carry that gene as a passenger alongside its own set of genes. Padhy then discovered that sometimes these cancerous mouse cells trigger an immune response in the mice because of a particular rat protein now on the surface of the mouse cells, a product of one of the genes from the rat tumors.
