Tortilla Flat (1942)

Simple construction - departing every so often to show off that yes, they know EXACTLY what they're describing - for the most part just recording the story as they would an event that really happened. He dies after a forty-foot fall into the gulch.

Tortilla Flat (film)

A policeman happens by and asks them to stop doing what they're doing in middle of the muddy road.

Tortilla Flat by John Steinbeck

Spiritually the jugs may be graduated thus: just below the shoulder of the first bottle, serious and concentrated conversation. He speaks English with a paisano accent and Spanish with a paisano accent. Tortilla Flat also treats the idea of friends betraying each other.

Tortilla Flat (1942)

There's pathos, with characters considering the mysteries of the universe and why things happen the way they do.

Restaurant & Saloon

Steinbeck writes, What is a paisano? These paisano tales become legend in Tortilla Flat. They built a fire and boiled some tea and drank it from the fruit jars, and at last they settled in the sun on the front porch. Synopsis: itinerant paisanos come together, then come apart.

Restaurant & Saloon

I can understand why and the book is of its time.
