Retraining and reskilling workers in the age of automation

How best can I tap into what are, for me, nontraditional talent pools? Once-reliable sectors for low-skilled American workers—textiles, clothing, shoes, the assembly of retail electronics, retail call centers—all but vanished from the U.

Retooling the Health Care Workforce for an Aging America: A Current Perspective

In the context of rapidly increasing demand for direct-care services, the need for these workers is beginning to reach a crisis stage. Examples of Efforts to Improve Recruitment and Retention While some efforts to improve the recruitment and retention of direct-care workers focus on a single strategy, other programs and organizations have developed a mixture of policy- and provider-based interventions.

Retraining and reskilling workers in the age of automation

Alternatively, government has tried to protect jobs and push up incomes artificially through subsidies to struggling industries. Over that same time period, the workforce providing similar services in institutional settings remained relatively stable.
