Policing Strategy and Performance Committee

The number of arrests and fines issued are other traditional measures of police performance.

Performance Measures

Attendees were divided about what role, if any, the department should play in officer-involved shootings, although there was unanimity that any role should be limited and predefined.

This is clearly not the case: As a 35-year veteran of the profession, I can say this with conviction, as can anyone else who has studied the recent evolution of policing. Systems that earn a reputation for high moral credibility will produce cooperation, support, acquiescence, deference, and compliance. Some jurisdictions may be seen as harsher enforcers of traffic laws, whereas others may be seen as more lenient.

To accommodate those differences, companies must think both top-down and bottom-up. Various studies in the U. This document will articulate how technology will assist the agency in meeting its core mission and establish an ongoing process to evaluate, upgrade, and enhance those technologies as agency goals and technology change.

Professional development review

When the police lose legitimacy in the eyes of the public, non-compliance with the law and opposition to police authority, and even hostility, are likely to occur. Moreover, a sense of fear can be experienced differently by two people living in the same neighbourhood. Lastly, arrests are time and place sensitive.
