Battle of Borodino

The whole position too strongly indicated the left flank to the French as the object of the operation, to admit to their forces being attracted to the right. The Grande Armée suffered two-thirds of its casualties by the time of the Moscow retreat; snow, starvation, and ensured that only 23,000 men returned across the Russian border alive.

The French carried out seven assaults against the flèches and each time were beaten back in fierce close combat. When Compans exited the woods on the far bank of the Kolocha, he was hit by massed Russian cannon fire; both Compans and Dessaix were wounded, but the French continued their assault. The Russian reinforcements' assault returned the redoubt to Russian control.
