Aynı zamanda, daha önceki araştırmalarda belgelenen Akçakale Adası Ören Yeri, Senger Tepe Kalesi ve Şeytan Kalesi de 2016-2018 yıllarında araştırılmıştır. As Jean Sauvaget has demonstrated in his analysis of the centres of Damascus and Latakia in Syria, those straight passageways remaining in the urban fabric were vestiges of classical street plans. In Palestine excavations of multi-period sites led to the recovery of Islamic material, and small assemblages of pottery were published from sites such as T'innik, Tal al-Mutasallim, Tal al-Sultan, and Jerusalem.

As a result of important discoveries made in the Mures, valley Turdas, it was named the Vinca Turdas culture, but there was no independent Turdas, culture. A menhir and a diorite mace-head with analogies north of the Black Sea were found in a tumulus at Hamangia. For a detailed typology of sugar pots from the Jordan valley, see LaGro and de Haas 1989-90.

Balkan history

As excavations are not permitted in the 'holy cities' of Mecca and Medina, there is no prospect of recovering physical evidence of the seventh-century architectural fabric and material culture of these cradles of early Islam. For all their interpretive problems, Arabic chronicles and related texts of the late eighth century onward still represent the best means for understanding this key phase in Islamic history with the study of Arabic papyri becoming an increasingly important aspect of historical research. How did Neolithic culture spread through the Balkans? In other words, the new rulers maintained the existing Roman-Visigothic irrigation infrastructure, but also introduced technologies such as qanats and spring-fed cisterns, which had long been in use in the Middle East.
