She argues that the porcelain dinner services made at Arita for the Meiji Emperor were not simply rote copies of European royal wares, but complex combinations of forms derived from Sèvres imperial prototypes and surfaces derived from images on bronze mirrors in the eighth-century imperial Shōsōin collection. This exhibition was held at the Sogō Museum, Yokohama, and the Sogō Museum, Nara. Such a reliance on the powers of observation is consistent with contemporaneous developments in the Japanese literary world as well, particularly the Realism and Naturalism movements.
