In opposition to this instance, he brings forward the perception of a ship sailing down a river, which we see successively lower and lower down the stream, which perception of the successively varying positions of the ship cannot be changed by the looker-on.

Yet, if we assign a special time to it between both states, a body would, during this time, be neither in the first nor in the second state : a dying man, for instance, would be neither alive nor dead; a body neither at rest nor in movement : which would be absurd. Kant characterized the subjective pole of the distinction as the contentless transcendental unity of self-consciousness and the objective pole as the contentless transcendental object, that corresponds to the concept of an object in general CPR, A 109.

It is owing to this basic relation between different things that a reason is to be provided for something, which only is in relation to what else is.
