Women, Equality, and Citizenship in Contemporary Africa

Evidence from Cote d'Ivoire', 1995, Oxford Bulletin of Economics and Statistics 57 1 : 77-96 Holmes, R. In contrast, massive floods affect the entire valley, killing humans and animals in the region. The researchers contrast this with the fact that women account for about 65% of the rural population, but acknowledge that many of these women obtained land through marriage.

Gender and Sexual Risk

It is, she believes, a reaction to policies and practices that have dispossessed many communities of their land to make way for national parks, conservation areas, plantations, mines, and other commercial developments. The employment rate of women refugees is approximately 45 % whereas the refugee men employment rate is on average 62 %.
