This prolific behavior can be detrimental to their health and should be discouraged, as it depletes them of necessary nutrients and causes physical exhaustion, potentially resulting in serious health problems - especially for the female; such as , , or even death caused by breeding related problems.

All About Breeding Cockatiels Review

Change the brooder lining after each feeding.

Cockatiels

To deter breeding, reduce the amount of artificial daylight you provide. If you want to put leg rings on the chicks around day 10 is usually the time, this can vary a bit from chick to chick. Larger and stronger babies are noticed first because they are louder and actively begging for food.

Cockatiel Nest & Breeding Boxes: Everything You Need To Know

More rapid changeovers start to take place as the hen will emerge more often to feed and also to bath so that she can go back in to the nest wet and create some humidity so that the egg shells are not too hard and dry thereby making it more difficult for the chicks to hatch Around 21 days from when the first egg was laid little chips start appearing in the surface of the egg as the chick prepares to emerge. The parent birds will usually start to lay again as soon as the first nest of chicks start to fledge and the whole process starts again.
