Marriage, Family & Relationships Research Paper Topic Suggestions

Suggests that aboriginal child-care needs relate to educational, social, and cultural requirements, as well as parental workforce participation. The second is the importance of accounting for how differences in social policies and programmes are likely to affect both the extent of work—family conflict individuals especially women experience, and the significance of workplace supports and negotia-

International Comparative Study of Work

In these societies, marriages are arranged by parents and other kin for economic reasons or to build alliances, and young people are simply expected to marry whoever is chosen for them. A classic study by Mirra Komarovsky 1964 found that wives in blue-collar marriages liked to talk with their husbands about problems they were having, while husbands tended to be quiet when problems occurred.

15.2 Sociological Perspectives on the Family

Descriptive data concerning the linkages between work-family pressure and several known correlates work hours, number of children, job satisfaction, mental well-being, and physical well-being will be presented.

Work

In this regard, several studies find that husbands and wives communicate differently in certain ways that sometimes impede effective communication. Historically, child welfare systems and other human services emphasized efficient provision of services with little attention to family systems and approached clients from a deficit model.

ERIC

Although the functional perspective assumes the family provides its members emotional comfort and support, many families do just the opposite and are far from the harmonious, happy groups depicted in the 1950s television shows.
