Kim Il Sung Works Volume 20. .

Munhwaō : the ‘cultured language’ and language branding in North Korea, 1964

As a trade learned from China, the process of silk production, up to this point, had been described using only Sino-Korean words. With English increasingly becoming a political, social, and economic commodity, it is reportedly becoming more difficult to survive in South Korea without buying into this system.

Munhwaō : the ‘cultured language’ and language branding in North Korea, 1964

So while Germany had more of a communication problem based primarily on vocabulary differences than a language problem, Korea is bound to have significantly more language divergence than Germany ever did. Ri claims that the rich cultures of the Aztecs, Mayans, and Incas were all but destroyed when the imperial nations of Spain and Portugal erased their languages, and with them, their traditions 1982.
