Battle of Bataan

Along the length of shore facing Bataan, only a handful of machine gun emplacements still survived. Americans today should thank God we had such women.

Bataan and Corregidor

For the first time in World War II, American troops faced Japanese soldiers on the ground.

Battle of Corregidor, 1942

Most of the dead were buried in mass graves that the Japanese had dug behind the barbed wire surrounding the compound. In the midst of the fighting, General MacArthur, Philippine Commonwealth President Manuel Quezon, and their families slipped away from Corregidor bound for Australia. For this, and a number of other feats over the course of four months and eight days, Bulkeley was awarded the , the , the and other citations.

General MacArthur leaves Corregidor

US Army Center of Military History. It was the largest surrender in American history, and even those who survived the death march awaited further atrocities at. These men belong to the 4th Marine Regiment, which was augmented by Marines from Marine Barracks Olongapo and the formerly Cavite-based 1st Special Defense Battalion.
