A comparison of four medieval Muslim historians' narratives of Saqīfa

Ḥumayd al-Zanāfī, who met the Umayyad forces at the Battle of the Nobles ghazwat al-ashrāf, so-called because so many highborn Arabs in the Umayyad army were killed. Volume 25 of Studies in Semitic Languages and Linguistics.

A comparison of four medieval Muslim historians' narratives of Saqīfa

Nasir al-Din al-Tusi was a well published author, writing on subjects of math, engineering, prose, and mysticism . In so doing, these historians attempted to synthesize the many accounts of the conquests of these regions into one cohesive narrative with Khālīd at its center.

Ibn Ḥabīb's Kitāb al

Although it doesn't mean that he was a supporter of mobility of the earth, as he and his 16th-century commentator , maintained that the earth's immobility could be demonstrated, only by physical principles found in natural philosophy. Additionally, all of the reused material discussed here was identified through computer mediated analysis, so this study also highlights how the tools of the digital and computational humanities demonstrate immense promise in enhancing and expediting the research of scholars across the medieval globe.
