Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast

RVH ED statistics It was not uncommon to have ED nurses and doctors constantly deal with a saturated infrastructure from trolley waits grinding the ED almost to a halt. THE FUTURE-NEXT STEPS FOR BELFAST TRUST; Our speciality is evolving and the CEM is leading on the requirements and evidence that supports effective, efficient and safe patient care, which will promote the recruitment and retention of staff with the flexibility to meet future developments in healthcare, technology and patient volumes. We need to be able to recruit and retain our ED consultants.

Pantridge believed defibrillators needed to be as prevalent as fire extinguishers, and that if non-physician responders could do CPR, then they could use defibrillators. He said the fact it has been found in three levels of the building shows that this had not happened in the critical care building. Pseudomonas, which killed four babies in two separate Northern Ireland hospital outbreaks in 2011 and 2012, has been found in taps across three floors in the Belfast Trust's ill-fated critical care building.

Opportunities must be created to bring together all stakeholders clinicians and managers to design, own and deliver pathways that make meaningful change. There is and has been a willingness to change but it has to be properly planned, managed and resourced. With this new tool, the Belfast treatment system became adopted throughout the world.

Medical Innovation in a Period of Conflict: The Hospital With a Warzone on its Doorstep

When closure of the BCH ED department came in November 2012 the transition into the RVH ED resulted in a decline in the standard of care, patient safety and staff morale. This is an issue that has to be recognised.

Emergency Medicine in the RVH and the challenges it faces from a clinician's perspective

New imaging and central decontamination centres were added in 2007.
