Maier SF, Seligman MEP: Learned helplessness: Theory and evidence. Parents who are less stressed themselves are more likely to be able to listen, to problem-solve, to give and receive affection, and to provide children with cognitive stimulation, such as by reading, asking questions, encouraging discussion, playing games indoors and out, or doing arts and crafts projects with their children Gershoff et al. Children who had been exposed to three or more frightening or threatening experiences were compared with children who had had no frightening or threatening life experiences.

Psychological trauma : a developmental approach

Many policymakers continue to be perplexed that background characteristics should be so powerful, so resistant to offset by better schooling.

Nunalleq, Stories from the Village of Our Ancestors: Co

A collaborative approach was crucial in achieving this, and in empowering and inspiring children to take ownership of their history and heritage. To ensure that the figure can be understood in both formats, authors should add alternative wording e.
