Like most states, West Virginia amassed a surplus of federal TANF funds due to the block grant structure of the program and caseload decline.

The Poverty Rate of West Virginia residents enrolled in elementary school grades 1-4 is moderately higher than the national average of 21. More than half of those kids were living in long-term psychiatric facilities. Wisconsin included a provision in the 2015 budget bill to drug test individuals participating in the Wisconsin Works and the Transform Milwaukee Jobs program and work experience programs for non-custodial parents.

The insurance may be at the limits for the circumstances, and subject to the terms and conditions that are determined by the political subdivision in its discretion. The Temporary Assistance for Needy Families TANF program was reauthorized in 2005, and this social welfare program continues to help millions of struggling families.

In 2013, Kansas enacted legislation to require drug testing for applicants and recipients suspected of using controlled substances.
