The Essential Shinran: A Buddhist Path of True Entrusting

One can, therefore, have direct access to this 13th-century religious leader. Shinran describes true and real shinjin variously: as diamond-like, because it is not dependent on the ego-self and hence is indestructible; as the settled state, because it is not subject to our emotional upheavals; and as non-retrogression, because there is no backsliding into confusion and darkness.

When the wind does blow, however, the sailboat is ready to cruise effortlessly on the high seas with lightness and alacrity. Alfred Bloom is professor emeritus of the University of Hawaii and perhaps the first American scholar of religion who academically introduced Shin Buddhism to the Western world. This light not only illuminates our darkness, it transforms it, so that we try our best to be compassionate with a sense of humility and gratitude, mindful of our karmic limitations.
