Public Sector Training Partnerships Build Power

According to Joint Apprenticeship Committee member Lisa Fossi, the state believes that the program, now enrolling its fourth cohort comprised of 15 apprentices, will help retain well-qualified IT workers because participants have a demonstrated interest in state employment. The Accra Agenda for Action AAA is an international agreement that aims to highlight the need for specific reforms in the aid sector to achieve improved aid effectiveness. However, Alasuutari 2011 and Andreotti 2010 contend that in order to incorporate effective intercultural learning, it is Program graduates will be qualified for promotion into an IT job category by the end of the apprenticeship. Remember, choosing an organizational structure now does not mean it will remain in that form forever.

The Meaning of Partnership in Development: Lessons for Development Education

This Programme has provided funding for the Centre for Global Development through Education CGDE , which aims to contribute to poverty reduction by enhancing the quality of basic education through capacity building in teacher education in Africa, using a partnership approach. This research is funded by Irish Aid through the Programme of Strategic Cooperation between Irish Aid and Higher Education and Research Institutes and is administered by the Centre for Global Development through Education CGDE and Mary Immaculate College, Limerick. While the state and union have not yet finalized their evaluation of the program, workers generally reported high levels of satisfaction with the training.

1. Creating and Maintaining Coalitions and Partnerships

Both research and anecdotal evidence demonstrates that labor-management partnerships have been structured in ways that do so. Some claim that partnerships are defined by power relations.

STEM Partnerships

While this requires a union local to have sufficient staffing to conduct this outreach to training participants, even when training occurs through a third party such as a community college, unions in a partnership should prioritize outreach.
